MAY 2025 | LET'S TALK: WALKING

SHINE DURING YOUR NEXT CHECK-UP

Regular walking can have a major impact on your physical exam results!

Walking strengthens the cardiovascular system, helps regulate weight, and reduces inflammation. People who walk consistently see improvements in key health markers like blood pressure, cholesterol levels, blood sugar, and resting heart rate. They have lower risks for chronic diseases and improved physical endurance measurements.

The result? People who maintain a daily walking habit receive more positive feedback during their annual physical exams! So lace up, get moving, and remember: the small steps you take today lead to the big wins you'll celebrate during your next doctor's visit!

BETTER WALKS. BETTER HEALTH. BETTER CHECK-UPS.

Research shows walking regularly can:

Lower blood pressure and help blood vessels become more flexible

Improve circulation and decrease stress hormones like cortisol

Improve insulin sensitivity and help prevent Type 2 Diabetes

Boost lung strength, improve breathing efficiency, and can lead to better spirometry results

Lower your risk of heart disease by up to 30%
